BIO

Kane Hunter Chamberlain is Bear Clan of Algonquin/French descent from the Antoine First Nation, descendants of the historic Matawasi`bi ani`cena`bi (Mouth-of-the-River People). Kane has been working with his Indigenous brothers and sisters since 1990, when he opened Ontario's first cross-cultural, phase II, open custody facility for young males in conflict with the law. Since then, Kane has held various high-profile positions that continued to address cultural and justice needs for Indigenous people across Ontario.

Whether his focus was on assisting those involved in the court process, community mediation and conflict resolution, developing aboriginal policy for youth justice services, and intergovernmental affairs, working with federal inmates returning to their communities, and more recently, as a private practice therapist, seeing indigenous clients through the National Indian Health Branch, and as an emergency on-call therapist for Health Canada, Kane believes the following to hold true:

> That the needs of individuals are few, namely, to be seen, heard, believed, to know that they are trusted and held in good faith, to be allowed to take their place and to know that their existence is beneficial. It is at the centre of these values that Kane engages his community and society.
